

Origin of the Human Species

Written by Peter Fonteece

Human beings did not—absolutely did not—evolve from any animal, fish, bird, or insect species. We as humans were distinct beings from the very beginning, the first moment of inception. And, no, we were not created or dropped off on earth by alien creatures. Sorry, if this essential reality ruins the cornerstones of the sci-fi and horror movie genres, but someone must stand up for the truth.

Exactly how did human beings come about on earth? Well, the same way they have come about on all of the other planets and moons throughout the universe. (And on behalf of Earth's moon people, I say, Stop bombing the moon, you ignorant and ego-bloated maniacs!)

The process of how human beings came about, their origins, are, in fact, quite simple. There is no gore, or wretched slime, or earth-shattering wails of indignation, or zapping of laser weapons in the tentacles of green aliens. Quite the contrary. The first moment of inception is beautiful and simple. In fact, nature has—countless times—shown us the way. The physical process of creation is all around us.

The problem is that we have been brainwashed to believe that the process of creation did not involve, in the minutest details, the absolute Wisdom and complete Love of the Divine Perfect One. And, so, we have been conditioned to digest the most bizarre and complicated understructures in order to justify acceptance of the imprisonment which is being steadily imposed upon us by the upper echelons.

The precise details of human inception cannot be given at this moment, because currently humankind has the most difficult time acknowledging basic natural truths—such as the great harm caused by nuclear radiation—and so are not in the mindset to willingly receive greater truths. Hopefully, this will change. If the mindset of human beings does not change very, very soon, and exact truth become an absolute societal requirement, then earth's future is incredibly bleak.
